Coming home

"In a country where 100 million seniors live, we need to provide them with a respectful accommodation, where they would love to stay. These communes would be places where seniors can lead a life of dignity and independence," says Mansoor Dalal, founder and chairman of ASLI that strives to outline guidelines, frameworks, policies and more for the 'Assisted Living' space apart from Independent or Adult living. ASLI is a voluntary accreditation body to senior living providers by helping draft and implement guidelines and rules for development, that are relevant to the industry, so as to create consistently high quality senior living projects. ASLI is organising a national conference in the first quarter of 2013 which will be attended by all the stakeholders of the senior living industry so that first of its kind building bye-laws and code of practice for the industry, can be formulated and presented to the central government for enactment.
